WHAT PENSION SHOULD TODAY'S 30-YEAR-OLDS RECEIVE?

The demographic slump, the unstable macro-economic situation and the structural changes on the labour market are global challenges to the pension systems of all the developed countries, which today are seeking new recipes for sustainability. The aim is the same: long-term sustainability for the pension system and adequate pension provision. What will pensions be like in 30 years' time, and what will tomorrow's insurance contributions be like? Will Russia learn from the leading experience of foreign pension systems or will it take its own 'special' path?

GROWING TALENT: GLOBAL EDUCATION FOR RUSSIAN ENTREPRENEURS AND OFFICIALS

As Russia increasingly competes on a global basis for human capital, it must seek new ways to reverse the trend of a 'brain drain' and take measures to become a net importer of talent. The Global Education programme, developed by the government's Strategic Initiatives Agency, is designed to attract graduates from top universities outside Russia with degrees in high-priority economic sectors, sometimes coupled with offers to have one's education paid for. How does this programme work in practice and what additional other measures should be taken?

PUTTING RUSSIAN MONEY TO WORK IN RUSSIA

Persisting economic uncertainty in Europe and perceived political risks in Russia have contributed to capital flight and weakening FDI trends. However, the Russian real estate sector has proven more resilient, and the government has committed to redoubling efforts to improve the investment climate and increase FDI in Russia. What immediate steps should be taken to shore up the investment climate, and how might such measures impact investment in large-scale developments and real estate projects?

RUSSIAN START-UPS: LOCAL AND GLOBAL PLAYERS

The globalization of Russian start-ups is growing, with at least 30 foreign venture capital funds actively looking at Russian opportunities. But despite this and government support for small, innovative businesses, Russian projects are not well represented abroad. What is preventing Russian start-ups from expanding into global markets in stronger numbers?

THE LEGAL ENVIRONMENT AND ITS IMPACT ON BUSINESS

In a global marketplace where economies must compete for foreign and domestic capital, the national legal environment and judicial system are key elements to success. What steps should be taken to improve economic legislation in Russia? Should the legal system allow for flexible and discretionary instruments, and what should the enforcement mechanisms be in this case?
